MUST THEY DIE?

Mr. Bernard Horwich, the delegate of the Central Relief Committee who has just returned from Poland, says, speaking of the hundreds of thousands of Jews over there, "They must die!"

And so we ask the question, "Must they die?"

The report, thus far rendered by Mr. Horwich is only of a preliminary nature. Mr. Horwich, in reality, did not attempt to give a report when he addressed the workers of the Central Committee. He just told of the things he had seen, of the terrible conditions he had found. No need to cite figures. The story of the fourteen year old boy who spoke of his brothers and sisters as "my children" is enough to melt even the stoniest heart. And who can remain unmoved when hearing of the five year old tot who in a day and a half had nothing to eat but a piece of candy given him by Mr. Horwich? And will not the terrible suffering of Bertha Grossman and her five children bring tears to the eyes of all?

Mr. Horwich tells us that a rat had eaten away the leg of a baby and the mother had thought that the child was crying for food which she could not give.

And in his own anguish, Mr. Horwich cries out, "They must die!"

Must they die?

In Warsaw alone, one hundred thousand Jews are dependent upon charity for just one meal—a plate of soup

—a day. And the others fear the coming of hunger—the dread foe.

In Warsaw it is bad; in the smaller cities it is worse and in Lithuania it is worse than all.

And adding to the harrowing misery have been the pogroms!

They must die, reports the relief commissioner.

They will die, if American Jewry does not come to the aid of the stricken.

We printed in Friday's issue of the Jewish Daily News the full text of Mr. Horwich's speech not to harrow the feelings of our readers. We printed the address so that American Jewry might know what is really transpiring on the other side.

We are so comfortable, we are so smug and self-satisfied that there is temptation to exclaim, as did Marie Antoinette, "The poor have no bread to eat; why don't they eat cake?"

"I will give you money," said Col. Grove of the American Food Commission, to thirteen year old Abraham Lichovotsky. "What will I do with money?" cried the heroic lad. "Give me flour and I will find a way to bake bread."

Oh, for another Jeremiah to write a new Book of Lamentations, the Twentieth Century "Aichoh"!

Well, may we quote from that ancient book:

"Darker than black is now their visage; they are not to be recognized in the streets; their skin is shrivelled fast upon their bones; it is dry, it is become like wood.

"Happier are these slain by the sword than those slain by hunger."

"They must die!"

They shall not die! They shall not die!

Ours the loving task to rescue them. They are blood of our blood and bone of our bone.

And if they were not, they are fellow human beings.

If they die, our's the guilt.

If the mothers and the babes perish the accusing finger will be pointed at us and we shall never be able to justify ourselves.

"They must die!"

They shall not die! must re-echo in every Jewish home in the United States.

Must they die? American Jewry has within its power to answer yes or no.—Jewish Daily News.

JEWISH UNDERTAKERS IN LODZ STRIKE IN PROTEST AGAINST ATTACK BY POLISH SOLDIERS.

The Polish soldiers in Lodz converted the Jewish cemetery there into a camp. They keep their horses among the graves and desecrate practically all of the bodies buried there. In addition to that they attack all participants in Jewish funerals taking place there. Conditions have reached the stage where the employees of the Jewish undertakers refuse to perform funerals for fear of attacks. The relatives of the dead are compelled to bury the bodies.

The Jewish inhabitants of Lodz petitioned the Minister of the Interior to alleviate conditions.
